Burning Man participant has big ideas, can't get shit together

by VICTOR TORRES & JOHN CORDARO

Rick Marshall, five-time Burner from Fresno, California, always has great ideas for Burning Man. His highly-stylized themes, rare found-objects and extensive construction research are things his fellow Burning Man campers have learned to count on. But like many who think big for the playa, the chance of his ideas coming into fruition are about as probable as finding a clean porta-potty on Saturday night.

"Yep, this year will be the big one," says Rick, as he fiddles with the ropes on the payload of his truck. "Last year was a flop, but everyone knows it was because of high winds that we couldn't get the elevator to the top of the six-story twisty slide." Remarkably, his campmates have a different story.

"God love him," said Jan Timmons, his live-in girlfriend and part-time masseuse/fire spinner/stripper. "But Rick always gets these big ideas in that head of his. Next thing you know he's buying rolls of aluminum sheeting, fifty pounds of turquoise feathers, and enough rebar to build a skyscraper." Friend Mike Johnson adds, "It always ends the same. As soon as his shoes hit the playa, he's digging into the drug bag and completely forgoes the theme. If he could just focus while on Special K, we might actually get something done"

For the past two years, Rick's camp has had the unfortunate names "Junk Camp," "Shit Camp," and "That train wreck on the corner." Perhaps this year will be different. But it's not looking likely.

11 reasons why I'm not at Burning Man this year

by GIL VAN BLUHY 1. Spontaneous creativity has given way to dictated thematic homogenization. 2. Self-discovery involves a bit more than taking off all of your clothes and changing your name to Starflower Moonchild for a week. tume is still at the cleaners. 4. Last year had 30% less sparkle than previous Burning Man Experiences™ 5. I won't have to answer stupid questions like, "What do you guys do here at your

6. I've already had enough helpings of Critical Tit camp?" all day long.

7. It's easier to fill out my federal tax forms than it is to register a theme camp or art car.

8. The multitude of selfimportant fire performers has taken on all of the banal intrigue of watching a thick coat of Sherman-Williams dry

BRCP0: Why bother? by ALBERT KAUFMAN

The Black Rock City Post Office will once again be open 24/7 this year. But what the fuck is it? Why do we need a post office on the playa? Is it really a post office? I slave at the BRC Post Office because it is, quite simply, the most interesting interactive one-on-one improvisational theater on the planet. Take sleep deprivation, mix in some willing actors, and throw in a great facade with props, such as our own playa postage, postcards, and official-looking laminates. Add in some seriously crazy attitude, not to mention bribes from the customers, and you've got either a laughing spell or a seriously-spanked bottom that you'll never forget.

When's the best time to visit? Anytime your heart desires! And we're always looking to train exceptional volunteers – especially after midnight. The BRCPO will take pre-stamped outgoing mail and stamp it with our super-cool Burning Man stamp which will be sent to your loved ones. We also deliver mail and other items such as strip-o-grams, chicken-grams, and interplaya singing telegrams, 24 hours a day. Come visit! You won't regret it.

What's up with the Greeters?

Sweetthang with Greeter

Right-Hand Man Abdullah

by ADRIAN ROBERTS f you're like us here at Piss Clear, you just want to get the fuck through the gate as quickly as you can, without having to deal with an annoying Greeter. These people are usually first- and second-year Burners, and their job is to hold you up, hand you a bunch of Crap you won't even read until you get back home, and subject you to a bunch of Stupid questions.

So now ... it's payback time! We hooked up with the Greeter Project Manager, Susan Bernosky aka Sweetthang, and subjected her to some stunid questions of our own PISS CLEAR: How the hell did they rope you into this thankless job?

SUSAN BERNOSKY: Money, fame, alcohol, and Sex. PC: Okay, I take that back, I guess it's not really a thankless

iob. What are the best job perks that come with being a Greeter? SB: Working with volunteers and tapping into the energy of Burners who are JUST arriving at Burning Man. It's a pretty good fix. And I've been given some cool shirts.

PC: That sounds like SUCh the bullshit answer. Tell me, what's the best thing that's ever happened to you as a

SB: Meeting a Stranger in the real world who remembered me from Burning Man because I greeted them.

PC: That's it? What about the worst thing?

SB: Being embarrassed that I was taking the position SO seriously that I had to be reminded by my friends that it's only a week in the desert.

PC: You know, the Gate people think they're much COOler than you guys.

SB: Everyone thinks they're cooler than the Greeters. However, everyone stupid questions would like to be a Greeter at least once. Go figure?

PC: Why do so many of the Greeters seem like MOOChers, asking people if they've got anything for them?

SB: Holy shit, these questions are getting hard! In the years past, a good idea went bad and we have SINCE remedied it. Greeters shouldn't do that, and as far as I Know, in the last couple of years, they do not ask for shit. They may talk shit – but not ask for it.

PC: Do you find that most Greeters seem to be Second-year zealots, swept up into the spirit of Burning Man, and thinking that they've "got it," even though they've only been to the event ONCE?

SB: We don't have a time requirement to be a Greeter, so there are a lot of newbies and second-year Burners. For the most part, they're trying to figure out what the fuck is going on, and them feel a part of Burning Man. We have training and require Greeters to read the Survival Guide, the Jack Rabbit Speaks, the Afterburn report, etc., so that they understand more and can maybe answer questions that Burners may have.

PC: If that's so, then why did two different Greeters, two years in a row, have no fucking clue what Piss Clear was, even though we distribute 32,000 newspapers each year on the playa?

SB: I would direct that question to your advertising team and suggest that they get right on it! We might consider making Piss Clear required reading - have your guy call my guy.

PC: Obviously, there are "good" Greeters and "bad" Greeters. To you, what's the difference?

SB: A good Greeter passes out the collated material and garbage bag to everyone, doesn't let a registered theme camp in Without making sure they are placed, and tags as many videocapable cameras as come by him/her. A good greeter understands who they are greeting almost by ESP and touches upon what this person could USE as far as info is concerned - and doesn't waste anyone's time.

A bad Greeter ... hmmm ... is probably very drunk and demands that the person they are greeting get out of their vehicle, give 'em a beer', and kneel on the ground and beg permission to enter the city.

PC: What's up with the phrase "Welcome home?" Doesn't it smack of cult-like lingo?

SB: Yes - but it feels good at the same time - maybe we are a fucking cult!

Me, I didn't burn a thing

by JANELLE BROWN

m no Nature Girl. Sure, I've done my share of cooler-and-cookout camping trips, but I'm not one for immersing myself in the great outdoors. When I do go camping, I Stay in well-maintained national parks with running water just a few steps away.

In my City life, Nature holds few surprises for me. Weather is simply an annoyance that forces me to carry an umbrella or sunglasses during certain times of the year. I certainly Never think about survival - everything I could possibly need is as close as the organic corner store.

In short, spending a week in the desert at Burning Man is the antithesis of my lifestyle. When I visit la playa, I feel as if I've been Slapped in the face, shaken, and reminded that the elements are still in control.

Black Rock Desert lies pancakeflat, 3,905 feet above sea level, and stretches for 400 square miles. The temperature can break 115° during the blows the dust into TUII-OUS Stinging storms. Rain appears from nowhere to turn the playa into an immense sea of sucking mud, which dries within minutes when the sun returns. There isn't the slightest bit of vegetation - even the insects stay away.

It is completely uninhabitable.
Thousands head out here for Burning Man every year anyway. And I'VE been one of them. Like them, I am drawn to Burning Man to experience something cathartic, freeing, NeW, and rejuvenating. But I don't run naked and wreak havoc. Instead, I seek inspiration from a community of unique faces, visual todder for my camera, quality time with my friends - hell, even a tan. This year I think I'm prepared. And in many ways, I am. I know exactly where I Want to camp (half a mile from the chaos of Center Camp), how much water to bring (a liter a day), how to erect a shelter (blue plastic and lots of stakes). But year-old memories don't do JUSTICE to the playa's nothingness, expanses of sky and dirt so vast that the milling Masses in Black Rock City are dwarfed. Arriving at Burning Man feels nothing short of landing on the moon, and I still experience a disconcerting dizziness when I step out of my air-conditioned car and feel that first blast of dry heat and the crunch of dirt under my foot.

Setting up camp takes about an hour: wrestling with those tents is the most activity that I achieve all Week. The heat is so extreme that I am immediately turned into an immobile lump. There are a million things going on, but I can barely muster the energy for a bike ride. Instead, my friends and I lounge in our camp, listen to the radio, and read SeX tips aloud from Piss Clear. Activity consists of going to cocktail parties in neighboring camps, where we sit in the shade and paint our fingernails blue. Immersed in this lethargia, the time seems to INCh by: minutes last for hours. I feel I've aged a year in a day.

Sleeplessness extends the day. I go to rave camps each night once it's finally cool enough to move and dance until the small hours of the morning. But the stifling heat of my tent awakens me each morning at dawn. I'm stuck in a limboland of exhaustion: I can't sleep because I've hardly moved all day, and I can't move because I've hardly slept. I lie in the eerie blue shade of our plastic tarpaulin in a semi-lucid state, spray bottle in one hand, gin and tonic in the other. The deeper I SINK into this state, the more I become aware of what's happening to my body. I SaVOY the heightened sensations: the sun on my tace, the stickiness of the grim on my skin, mud between my toes and dust in my eyes.

I am paranoid about what's happening to my bodily functions. People have died out here, they say, and my inexperience with wilderness survival forces me to take those warnings Seriously. I smear on fresh sunscreen every hour; I SCOID my friends about drinking and dehydration; I follow the "piss clear" rule when I visit the porta-potty (if your urine is dark, you better drink some water, fast). I lose my appetite, and the Pop-Tarts go Uneaten; instead, I suck on the grapes that float in the melted ice in our cooler.

Mostly, I just sit and think. Like many young urban people I know, I am often consumed by restlessness and discontent. While others seem to be jetting off for six-month jaunts through Thailand, I sit in front of my computer for ten-hour days, WOYYY about things like credit card bills and high-yield investments, suffer from Sleep deprivation. Work stresses me out, relationships are elusive, and time passes faster than I can Seize it.

The normal concerns of a twentysomething urbanite, yes. But in the city I am so buffered by my comforts that it's difficult to take a step back from my possessions, my lifestyle, my routines, to see what really matters. I get lost in the mundane details and overlook the big picture, focusing on petty concerns like whether the bus in late in the morning, what phone calls I need to return, if my SOCKS match my shirt. t aoina to the desert with only a Cartul of essentials forces me to reprioritize. Suddenly life is reduced to the elementals: sleep, drink, food, shelter. Those everyday crises dissipate under the immensity of the sun, my mind is wiped clean of the daily events so that I can take a breath and tocus on the state of my mind instead of the state of my datebook. I realize I have a love-hate relationship with Burning Man. I don't go back for the events - last year I didn't make it to a single planned activity, not even the burning of the Man. The inactive hours and extreme conditions often grate on my Nerves. But I am drawn back by the flat cracked emptiness of the earth and the potential it offers. Burning Man is all about catharsis burning away the inner demons, clearing the psyche. Some experience that catharsis from participating in the events, letting go of their inhibitions to build and burn and participate in mass destruction. Me, I didn't burn a thing. The desert burned it all away for me.

This article first appeared in the hardcover coffee table book Burning Man, published by HardWired in 1997, and now out-of-print. It is reprinted here by

Beware of the Playa Nazis

by DAVE DEESE

Surely you know of the Playa Nazis. These people are the pinnacles of environmental stewardship, the defenders of Mother Earth, the thin green line between the sacred playa and 29,771 IGNOrant burners. "Leave No Trace' except tire tracks, air pollution, motor oil, antifreeze, transmission fluid, power steering fluid, brake fluid, gas, etc. What, you think those thousands of vehicles parked on the playa don't drip? How about all the 30-year-old hippie buses? No smog checks, six miles to the gallon, and lots of old seals to leak. Very eco-conscious. But it's okay, because the dreadlocked hippie crews are so artsy, so creative, so spiritual, and they brought great E. And I'm sure they all parked on a tarp with drip pans.

Besides cars, you know what else is bad for the playa? Pee. Water, urea, vitamins, and metabolites of whatever drug you did the night before harm the playa by staining it Yellow, and giving some poor slob playa pee clay foot. Everyone is SUPPOSED to pee in 134-degree porta-potties, or in bottles. It is not known exactly why peeing on the playa is bad, and if one is "pissing see any major impact. If the Playa Nazis were so CONcerned about this issue, one would think they'd be against BM altogether. When 30,000+ people come out to the desert, drink tons of fluids, do drugs, and party all night, you will have thousands of people pissing on the playa. I wonder – where does old Johnny-on-the-Pot take those tons of sewage? I'm sure they dispose of the muck in a very "eco-conscious" way. If you're curious, call their COrporate office. The phone number is right next to the big corporate logo on their trucks.

You know what else is bad for the playa? Burn scars. Fire causes the playa to feel pain, and may leave a hazardous hard Spot on the ground. Of course, the DPW provides 22 relatively unsupervised burn platforms that anyone can throw "approved" matter into. These cages become overflowing, toxic-smokespewing, raging infernos as people throw in plywood (made with glue), painted wood, paper, cardboard, and anything important. Because it'S Leave No Trace, man, or we won't get our permit next year, dude." One would think DPW or the Earth Guardians could put liners on the ground around the burn cages to prevent these terrible burn scars.

burning paint, plastic, glue, fabric, vinyl, etc. Forget about the ashes going in a landfill. Don't question the glorious Man burning. Then there's the Temple of Stars, the burn barrels, and all the art that's burned. I shouldn't mention these facts because it might interfere with the Burning Man Experience.™ Yes, it's as if the desert spirits are saying to us, "Hey party people, it's cool if you're polluting the air, all that soot will end up 50 miles away, and eventually in the ground water, but no one will ever know. So party on! Take some more acid and burn your couch!"

Never mind all the pollution from Center Camp open playa cold soup out of the can meth diets Critical Tits naked guys on pogo sticks dust masks just breath it Earth Uranus "Elvis" sunglasses aviators foot rubs titty twisters lederhosen fur coats heterosexuality crimes against nature hippie crack crack holding it in puking your guts out "just say no" "wake and bake" lip balm bag balm Mohawks mullets near-perfect weather blinding dust storms Patriotism Satanism pierced bellybuttons hairy backs playa events schedule randomly finding fun stuff priests priestesses public art public sex poontang pussy PVC Reno Sparks Saturday night Wednesday afternoon shade domes observation towers shirt, no pants anything that covers your hairy balls, please skipping this year never coming back! temples of belief heads in the stars this year's them last year's theme trance camps pancake camps Ukrainian folk music trance music trucker hats cowboy hats Utilikilts Utiliskirts virtue vice water beer water bottles water sports push-ups - list compiled by Eggchair Steve and Rooster Sejx

WHAT'S OUT

annoying greeters

Black Rock Gazette

astronauts

BLM

Bush '04

bush/dick

beer and ludes

WHAT'S IN

annoying the greeters

transvestites

Harvey '08

two johns acid and Viagra

one-ply toilet paper

You're all a bunch of losers

by an ANONYMOUS CRAIGS LIST POSTER

he Burning Man web site claims: "Trying to explain what Burning Man is to someone who has never been is a bit like trying to explain what a particular color looks like to someone who is blind.

So from this, are We to

Not the authors of this

Not the authors of this

assume that Burning Man is an event synonymous with bad poetry? Wait, I have to stop laughing/crying/vomiting. This is just too easy. Trying to explain what Burning Man is to someone who has never been is easy as fuck it's a god-dammed fraternitysorority mixer for UGIY people!

Now before you get all defensive, let me provide evidence for my case. To Start with, the monsters that attend Burning Man are the same kids who thought they didn't fit in during high school - the alternalosers who started ska bands and went vegetarian, all in an attempt to blow the minds of those they saw as following the "status quo." Here's a news flash for you losers: you are just that, losers. Freaks by necessity. Your necessity was that you just weren't good-looking/charismatic/blonde enough to kick it with the cool kids, so you tried to start your own lame clique.

You want to meet a 'ea| freak? Remember that fat chick that ate lunch alone in the library every day? She's the real OUTCAST. And she won't be JOINING you at Burning Man. You wanna know why? Because she already killed herself. That's right! All of us who truly don't fit in aren't in Black Rock City participating in some weird hippie drug festival. We're too busy hating ourselves at home. If you're an honest-to-goodness freak, you're not going to find YOUr people at Burning Man.

So what is Burning Man, after all? It's just a big excuse for weird losers to be naked, hot, and uglier than ever. It takes place in the utmost deepest regions of Satan's playground, the hot-ass Nevada desert. Once the writhing throngs of alterna-dorks arrive, the following events soon occur: everyone gets fugly-ass nekkid. They have lots of nasty, unprotected SeX. They make shitty "sculptures" out of scrap wood and junk found from dumpster diving. They pollute the desert. They have near-death experiences from heat exhaustion, dehydration, and just plain Stupidity. Then they head back home to their uber-hip lives as bartenders and local fledgling band dorks. Or even worse, hippies. Let's see these chumps for who they really are: bored, privileged, college-educated, minimally-talented, "sensitive," vegan, Volvo-driving, faux enviro-freaks, with nothing better to do. I have a better idea than going to Burning Man. Why don't you go to some under-privileged neighborhood and use your time and money to help re-build the communities there. Actually do something with that week you took off work. Something better and more enriching than partying in the desert. Volunteer at a shelter, visit the elderly, foster a puppy. Hell, you can fucking lay in bed and stare at the wall and you'll still be doing better than if you made the gas-guzzling journey to Burning Crap. Take the money from your $250 ticket and donate it to a real cause. And if you need some terrible festival like this to help expand your cre-

If it's friends that you're seeking, you can do certainly do better than the fake-ass friendships of a drugged-up, weeklong desert party. What ever happened to real friends anyway? If you've never been able to establish friendships before, I highly doubt that Burning Man is going to be a good jumping-off point for you. This place is just as exclusive and terrible as any fraternity rush party.

That IS, until the sun goes down. Then the drugs come out, the clothes come off, and people finally start feeling comfortable. And this kind of "Nero in Rome" hedonism - but, once again, for very ugly people - continues for six god-awful days. And what are you left with? Boring-ass stories about that time you went to Burning Man. Trust me, no one thinks you're cooler because you go. In fact, every time you mention it, all we want to do is stab you in the mouth with a pitchfork. So when you get back home next week, do us all a tavor, okay? Just Shut the fuck up about Burning Man. Believe me, nobody wants to hear about it.

This rant was originally posted to Craigs List (www.craigslist.org) in September 2002.

ativity, you're fucked in the first place.

Dirty dozen

LadyBee name-drops cool shit on the playa

by LADYBEE

his is an annual list of theme art projects that I can't wait to see. There are far too many interesting projects to mention, but here's twelve for

Bok Globule by Leo Villareal and Carter Emmart aka Barbie, New York City A dome featuring Barbie's fisheye projections of the entire universe from the American Museum of Natural History in New York City. Plus, Leo's light installation from P.S. 1 is displayed on the outside and his gravity chairs are inside. This is the place to hang out at night. Love these Disorient people. On the walkway from the Man to the old temple spot, left side

Seven Sisters by the Flaming Lotus Girls Shoots spiraling plumes of fire 100 feet into the sky. Cool! 8:00 Esplanade

Jadu Beta by Saul Melman, Brooklyn

From the same artist who brought you the giant urinal from last year, this 450-foot-long walk-in inflatable sculpture is made of 500 inflated plastic "pods" that are orgasmically soft and buoyant to the touch. As you adventure into the sculpture, you will hear the strains of an alien sound score. Make sure you treat every bubble gently. Climbing or jumping on a "pod" will quickly destroy the sculpture. Instead, press your face gently into its semi-transparent skin and get a new perspective on yourself. The only thing missing is a bar! 1:30 Deep Space

Wheel of the Sacred Earth Year by Kasia Wojnarski, Portland, Oregon

This is Kasia's big year - she brought us the walkthrough fire tunnel of years past and this year, is doing multiple fire installations. 6:30 Esplanade

Everything inside and outside the Observatory There are ten different installations inside and interactive off-planet theater outside in the ten dioramas, managed by NAMBLA The Clown. In the Vault of Heaven, everyone's a star!! Burning Man

White Noise by Emily Trutt, Los Angeles A white house, a white picket fence ... white on white on white on white ... eerie. 10:45 deep playa, left side

Cosmic Dance by Daniel Dunkle A 40' diameter Foucault's pendulum will live at the Keyhole. Watch the pegs tumble. Center Camp Keyhole

Observer, Observed by Kate Raudenbush, New York Fun with mirrors! It's a walk-in mirrored cube by day, a voyeuristic peepshow by night. 1:00 deep space

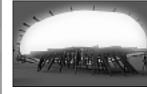

Deeper by Peter Hudson

Remember the swimmers zoetrope? Peter's back with a figure that appears to dive out of the sky and into the playa. Actually, I should say, it's an endless stream of divers. Off the walkway to the Man, right side

Alien Semaphore by Hedley

You can control the look and feel of twelve big white light sculptures. Cool! 10:45 deep space Temple of Stars by David Best

Somewhat grander in scale than previous temples, but horizontal rather than vertical, the Temple arcs a quarter mile across, and is inspired by Japanese sculptural landscapes. It will burn on Sunday night. Farther out there

Crash Landing by Anakin Koenig A radiant object, part meteorite, part spaceship, crash-landed on the playa. 10:00 between Mercury and Venus

There are over 200 other art installations out there – get on your bike and go discover them!!

You may not buy anything while you're out here, but you sure had to buy a bunch of shit before you got here, didn't you?

BM breeds consumerism!

by DAVE DEESE

Being one who tries to plan ahead, I paid $165.00 for my ticket. But many Burners paid $200-$300. Is this too much? I don't know. But I do know that the entire cost of one's Burning Man trip starts to add up tast - and is rarely mentioned. Rental fees, fuel, food, ice, water, drugs, camp equipment, liquor, costumes, etc., etc., etc. And this doesn't even include hidden costs, such as vehicle wear and tear, insurance, taxes, and other things people don't factor in. The truth is, Burning Man is an enormously expensive event to attend. It's become a playground for the affluent and well-to-do. And I find that hard to justify. Eccentric lefties/artists/anti-capitalists/countercultural types are Seldom good at economics. Why would any of the aforementioned be in favor of Burning Man? BM breeds CONSUMPTION and waste on a huge level. Big box retailers IOVE BM! The anti-corporate, anti-Wal-Mart, anti-capitalist/globalization crowd should be vocally against Burning Man. Sure, there may be no COMMETCE in Black Rock City – but that's only because everyone has already bought everything from corporations before they got here! The BM "experiment in temporary community" in its present form is only made possible by large corporations. Anyone care to guess how many gallons of gas are used in the name of Burning Man? George W. Bush thanks you.

The kooky Left loves a good conspiracy: maybe Burning Man is actually an event COOKEO up by rich capitalists, in an effort to extract money out of dyed-in-the-wool liberals. Think about it.

Helpful hints for the playa by FUCKO PETE

Welcome back to BRC!

It's that time of year again

- the time of year

Christmas wishes it was. By now you have probably at least partially set up camp, have cursed the wind, dust, and/or heat more than once, and tasted the salt of your own sweat. This means it's time to start drinking heavily. Wah-wah, H<sup>2</sup>O. life-iuice... vitamin water? Just drink it often in large gulps all day, and try to avoid ending up where I did the afternoon of the Burn four years ago - laying in a Medical Camp gurney with an I.V. stuck in my arm next to two guys in gorilla suits who also had .06% sodium drips because of dehydration. There's nothing quite like waiting for a Med-Camp portapotty in a flame shirt and cowboy hat, holding your own I.V. bag and smiling dolefully as other Burners stare at you while a medical tech hopelessly looks for a key to the toilet. But digress. To further your Burning Man Experience" this year, I have compiled a list of helpful hints for your inconsideration

1. Rebar is bad for the

2. Your private parts will sunburn like no other area on your body.

3. Playa boogers can be thrown further than regular snot. 4. Filling your camelback hydration bladder with margaritas is a subversion of said device. I have mixed

(drink) feelings about this. 5. Glitter is not sun protection.

6. More gas is better (only when starting fires). 7. Tell any whiners who say

"that's not very safe" to read their fucking ticket. 8. Glowsticks can and will find their way into any orifice (but become less trade-

9. Don't open your mouth while chasing the water trucks.

10. Just because she's wearing tie-dye doesn't mean she has hairy pits and a veast infection.

Trace: the next level by VICTOR TORRES

& JOHN CORDARO

26, is pushing Leave No

Lori "Flittergirl" Wells,

Leave No

Trace, the mantra of Burning Man's past, present, and future, to the limit. Flittergirl says that this year she will attain her highest level of Leaving No Trace on the playa by staying at home. "I'm going to look through the many picture books I've bought over the years and take mushrooms," says Flittergirl. "My roommate has a couple of broken stereo speakers that I'll have playing trance and Goa for 24 hours straight at full blast," she adds. Flittergirl also plans to roll herself in a combination of gypsum dust and sugar water to add to the desired effect. "I don't plan to shower for a week and the arm of my sofa is going to get a workout while I watch the Burn streamed on my Mac." She has not confirmed if she will be squatting between

Vault of heaven? by REV. BLIND TOASTER

Vault of Heaven?

Bartender, I'll have what the man in the white hat is having. Alright already, enough with the themes! For the most part, people bring the same shit out here every year, the streets are all laid out the same, the lamplighters light the same lamps. Since when do we need a new theme every year when the whole place is a fucking theme park? What's the deal? Is this to give graphic artists something to do? Larry's ideas are starting to sound more and more like that dead king guy who ordered all those Easter Island heads built. "Hey, I know! Let's not just make a 120-foot Man, let's put it on top of a dome this year!" Rumor has it that next year's theme is going to be "Seven Brides for Seven Sisters" and the streets are going to be named after lesbian show tunes. Why not? It couldn't get any crazier than it is now